They are not, however, the only ones. In the past, the only way to get a good deal of information about a company was to go to the library and look up the annual report. But now, with the Internet, you can find out almost anything about a company in a matter of minutes. This is a double-edged sword. On the one hand, it gives investors a lot more information than they used to have. On the other hand, it also gives them a lot more information than they need. The result is that investors are often overwhelmed by the amount of information available and are unable to make the best use of it.
